Euthanasia Talk: Euthanasia Discourse, General Practice and End-of-life Care in the Netherlands Frances Norwood, 2005 In the Netherlands nearly one quarter of all people who die initiate a euthanasia request with their doctor yet 9 in 10 of those who initiate a request do not die by euthanasia Nine in 10 die instead of natural causes The Netherlands legalized euthanasia killing a person at that person's explicit request and assisted suicide giving a person the means to kill themselves at that person's explicit request by court decision in 1984 and again by legislation in 2001 With nearly a quarter of people who die in Holland not to mention their family members and health practitioners participating in this dialogue and so few participating in the act it begs the questions what are Dutch people talking about when they talk euthanasia and how does euthanasia talk impact the end of Dutch life After a 15 month ethnographic study of euthanasia and end of life care in the Netherlands with huisartsen Dutch general practitioners their end of life patients and their families I found two things First in practice Dutch euthanasia is more often a discourse than it is a life ending act a discourse firmly embedded in the cultural and historical contexts that make Dutch people Dutch Using a Foucauldian concept of discourse I argue that the Dutch have created a script that teaches citizens how to think and feel about death and ultimately how to die Second I found that euthanasia talk holds a wide array of meanings beyond the immediate the obvious planning for death One of the most important is to affirm social bonds and social life at the end of Dutch life People choose not to die euthanasia deaths because of the feeling of social connection that engagement in euthanasia discourse fosters Through engagement in euthanasia talk dying individuals maintain connection to family and society giving them something they need to remain living This dissertation is intended to provide ethnographic data not currently available on the modern day practice of euthanasia and to add to a growing body of literature on death dying and the role of the state the Miss G___ Project for Equity in Education when they began to lobby the provincial government to include women's studies in Ontario high schools To overcome this obstacle the Miss G___ Project has used creative eye catching images to brand its members as third wave activists who are approachable more ironically feminine than feminist catching the attention of a number of mainstream newspapers and magazines Yet is this the best approach for a feminist organization to take In this original and important case study Michelle Miller takes a critical look at the pros and cons of Miss G___'s media strategies She lauds the overall success of the group but argues that it is time for Miss G___ to rebrand its image and build its own media networks by using the alternative press and popular technology In doing so the Project can achieve its goal while aligning its vision with its politics
