Sikorski, Bonnie Sun Pan, Fereidoon Shahidi, 1994 Fish and marine invertebrates are important sources of nutrients for the world's population and many species have exceptionally high market value because of their exquisite sensory properties Both the utilization of the available catch in different forms and the market price are affected by the quality of the fish Proteins and nonprotein nitrogenous compounds play a crucial role in the nutritional value and sensory quality of seafoods as well as in the suitability of different species to various forms of processing preservation and use in other branches of the food industry This role of proteins results from their basic chemical and biochemical properties and functions in different tissues A presentation of the actual state of knowledge on seafood nitrogenous compounds in one volume may contribute to a better understanding of the involvement of these components in all stages of handling and processing fish It has been possible to prepare this text thanks to the cooperative effort of an international group of specialists The editors of the book are greatly indebted to all colleagues who have willingly contributed to this volume sharing their knowledge and experience as well as to all persons who have granted permission to use their previously published materials viii Preface ix A large part of the book has been prepared during my sabbatical in the Department of Marine Food Science National Taiwan Ocean University NTOU in Keelung Taiwan Process-Induced Chemical Changes in Food Fereidoon Shahidi, Chi-Tang Ho, Nguyen Van Chuyen, 2013-11-11 Chemical changes that occur in foods during processing and storage are manifold and might be both desirable and undesirable in nature While many of the processes are carried out intentionally there are also certain unwanted changes that naturally occur in food and might have to be controlled Therefore efforts are made to devise processing technologies in which desirable attributes of foods are retained and their deleterious effects are minimized While proteins lipids and carbohydrates are the main nutrients of food that are affected by processing it is their interaction with one another as well as involvement of low molecular weight constituents that affects their flavor color and overall acceptability Thus generation of aroma via thermal processing and bioconversion is of utmost importance in food preparation Furthermore processing operations must be optimized in order to eliminate or reduce the content of antinutrients that are present in foods and retain their bioactive components Therefore while novel processing technologies such as freezing irradiation microwaving high pressure treatment and fermentation might be employed control process conditions in a manner that both the desirable sensory attributes and wholesomeness of foods are safeguarded is essential Obviously methodologies should also be established to quantitate the changes that occur in foods as a result of processing This volume was developed from contributions provided by a group of internationally recognized lead scientists
