Fairhaven Brian L. Griffin, 2015-12-03 The complete history of that most southerly community on Bellingham Bay one of the four original towns that were consolidated in 1904 to become the present City of Bellingham Fairhaven Washington from the glaciers to today the places the participants and the grand possibilities A new arrival in 1889 said only crude raw beginnings the primeval forest of giant firs and cedars barely pushed back to the hillsides mud streets gouged out raw with jumbled piles of burning stumps flames and smoke obscuring the sky On the beach tents flap in the breeze and a few unpainted wooden structures suggest civilization is to come In 2015 what would be recognizable to any of those old timers would be the enterprising spirit of the latest inhabitants who have done so much to create Fairhaven's modern growth and economic strength

The Donovan Diaries Brian L. Griffin, 2020-09 John Joseph Donovan was a man born of common clay who lived the American dream rising to great heights of achievement wealth and community affection Donovan lived a storied life illuminated in this fascinating book by the discovery of his diaries long hidden in an old steamer trunk in Sag Harbor New York This early American story reveals the remarkable life of the son of Irish immigrants After fleeing the Irish potato famine his family established a New England farm where JJ grew up and succeeded in the long journey to a college education He then earned a civil engineering degree from Worcester Polytechnic Institute and was hired by the Northern Pacific Railroad to advance the line across the plains and over the Cascade mountains to the Salish Sea Later in his career he facilitated the rise of a city and new industries on Bellingham Bay Donovan was a man suited to the challenges and opportunities of his times but equally important he was an honest man of immense character determination and skill who left a legacy of civic accomplishment This is also a great love story an Irish Catholic boy and a New England Puritan girl struggling to overcome their religious and social differences
