that of each individual Did any one ever give to others the right of taking away his life Is it possible that in the smallest portions of the liberty of each sacrificed to the good of the public can be obtained the greatest of all good life If it were so how shall it be reconciled to the maxim which tells us that a man has no right to kill himself Which he certainly must have if he could give it away to another But the punishment of death is not authorised by any right for I have demonstrated that no such right exists It is therefore a war of a whole nation against a citizen whose destruction they consider as necessary or useful to the general good But if I can further demonstrate that it is neither necessary nor useful I shall have gained the cause of humanity The death of a citizen cannot be necessary but in one case When though deprived of his liberty he has such power and connections as may endanger the security of the nation when his existence may produce a dangerous revolution in the established form of government But even in this case it can only be necessary when
