Global Positioning for Financial Services Hazel J. Johnson, 2000 Global Positioning for Financial Services is a broad based examination of the changes occurring in financial services The forces of privatization and securitization are but two of the factors that are changing the way financial services are delivered Technology has enabled direct sale of securities to ultimate investors in ways that have not been possible until now Regulators must adjust their perceptions of risk and reward to maintain safe systems Astute industry participants must have a clear understanding of these dynamics in order to develop effective strategies for the future G.K. Positioning System in Household Surveys for Better Economics and Better Policy John Gibson, David J. McKenzie, 2007 Distance and location are important determinants of many choices that economists study While these variables can sometimes be obtained from secondary data economists often rely on information that is self reported by respondents in surveys These self reports are used especially for the distance from households or community centers to various features such as roads markets schools clinics and other public services There is growing evidence that self reported distance is measured with error and that these errors are correlated with outcomes of interest In contrast to self reports the Global Positioning System GPS can determine almost exact location typically within 15 meters The falling cost of GPS receivers typically below US 100 makes it increasingly feasible for field surveys to use GPS as a better method of measuring location and distance In this paper the authors review four ways that GPS can lead to better economics and better policy 1 through constructing instrumental variables that can be used to understand the causal impact of policies 2 by helping to understand policy externalities and spillovers 3 through better understanding of access to services and 4 by improving the collection of household survey data They also discuss several pitfalls and unresolved problems with using GPS in household surveys
