Urban Decay Realities Michael Davis, AI, 2025-02-21 Urban Decay Realities examines the multifaceted issue of urban decline exploring why some urban areas prosper while others deteriorate The book delves into the interconnected problems of deteriorating infrastructure housing neglect and community disinvestment revealing how these factors contribute to a cycle of decay For example the book highlights how outdated infrastructure not only poses safety risks but also hinders economic activity while housing neglect creates instability and poverty The book argues that urban decay is not accidental but rather a consequence of deliberate policy choices and systemic inequalities By presenting historical context and examining discriminatory housing policies the book challenges conventional narratives that often blame residents or market forces Each chapter builds upon this argument using case studies and empirical analysis to highlight the connections between infrastructure housing and community investment The book concludes by offering potential solutions and strategies emphasizing the importance of community led initiatives and equitable resource allocation for successful urban revitalization

Veterans Equitable Resource Allocation System, 2003 Equitable Resource Allocation Using All-pay Auctions Rajarshi Ghosh Dastidar, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Department of Aeronautics and Astronautics, 2011 Auction theory is a very interesting topic which studies mechanisms of various formats for buying and selling goods There are all kinds of mechanisms covered in the ambit of auction theory ranging from sealed bid auctions like first price or second price auctions to open bid auctions like the English or Dutch auctions One interesting kind of auction is the all pay auction in which as the name suggests all the players pay their bids Analysis of all pay auctions with virtual money has so far been neglected in the auction theory literature However it can be used to design a mechanism with a wide variety of applications including equitable resource allocation and fairer systems for legislation and corporate management In this thesis we shall present this novel mechanism analyze it in a game theoretic framework and consider the variants of the problem including the perfect and imperfect information cases Furthermore we shall outline how to find the equilibrium bidding strategies for this mechanism which lead to equitable distribution of resources One possible application of this is in equitable resource allocation such as in a battlefield where different agents have competing needs for limited resources to complete their missions Finally we shall draw the connection between this mechanism and the process of voting in the legislature or the company board rooms Currently a party needs just more than 50% of seats in the legislature to control 100% of the bills Similarly a shareholder needs just 51% of shares to completely control the company We shall show how it is possible to modify these voting systems using the proposed mechanism to enable even the minority players to have an equitable say in the decisions

Strengthening Community Participation in Equitable Resource Allocation for Health ,2006      Resource Allocation in the Health Service Nicholas Mays,Gwyn Bevan,1987      Environmental management Arthur W. Busch,1974*      An Analysis of the Veterans Equitable Resource Allocation (VERA) System Jeffrey Wasserman,Jeanne Ringel,Barbara Wynn,Karen Ricci,Jack Zwanziger,2001 Since April 1997 the Veterans Equitable Resource Allocation VERA System has served as the basis for allocating the congressionally appropriated medical care budget of the Department of Veterans Affairs DVA to its regional networks Concerned that the VERA system may not allocate resources in a manner consistent with its mission Congress requested a study of the system and how allocations are affected by a number of factors including infrastructure age extreme weather conditions and participation in medical education This report describes the results of RAND s initial analysis Because of the project s short time frame only qualitative analysis was performed Among the findings were that health care delivery costs may be affected by the age physical condition and historical significance of a VISN s capital infrastructure factors for which VERA does not currently adjust An additional finding was that VERA s current case mix adjustment may not adequately account for differences in the average health status of veterans across networks The influence on costs and access to care of factors such as weather extremes was less clear In spite of its possible shortcomings VERA appeared to be designed to meet its objectives more closely than did previous VA budget allocation systems A plan was presented for further quantitative analysis of a number of critical issues that emerged from the current study

Resource Allocation in ECSA Countries ,2006      An Analysis of the Veterans Equitable Resource Allocation (VERA) System ,2001 The Veterans Equitable Resource Allocation VERA system was instituted by the Veterans Health Administration VHA the organization in the Department of Veterans Affairs DVA that is responsible for providing health care to veterans in 1997 The system was designed to improve the allocation of the congressionally appropriated medical care budget to the 22 regional service networks that comprise the VA health system In recent legislation H R 4635 the U S Congress asked the DVA to conduct a study on whether VERA adequately meets the special needs of some veterans In response to this legislation the VHA asked RAND s National Defense Research Institute to undertake this study Specifically this study examines the degree to which VERA accounts for differences in the age and geographic location of facilities their patient case mixes and other factors The study also examines cost issues associated with affiliations between VA facilities and academic medical centers The findings and recommendations from the study are documented in this report Study findings should be of interest to VA personnel Congress and other policymakers particularly those interested in health care for veterans Health economists and policy planners may also have an interest in the findings This research was sponsored by the DVA and was carried out jointly by RAND Health s Center for Military Health Policy Research and the Forces and Resources Policy Center of the National Defense Research Institute The latter is a federally funded research and development center sponsored by the Office of the Secretary of Defense the Joint Staff the unified commands and the defense agencies California.
