

Module 3: Globalization Reader III

Answer the questions below. State your opinion on the question and briefly explain your answer. There are several valid answers possible to most of these questions. The key here is to formulate your own opinion and provide some justification instead of getting the “right” or “wrong” answer. Please draw on The Globalization Reader and the attached power point for your responses. Your answers should be 25-50 words and the worksheet is due on Feb. 4.

1. Is Taylor Swift or Arnold Schwarzenegger a more appropriate figure for discussing contemporary globalization?

Arnold Schwarzenegger is a more appropriate figure. He was born in Austria and came to the U.S. to star in a variety of Hollywood films and even served as the Governor of California. Mr. Schwarzenegger reflects the multinational identity of the modern entertainment industry, and especially reflects the way in which Hollywood seeks to appeal to universal audiences.

2. To what extent do you agree with the professor that multiculturalism, feminism, and gay rights have become a significant element in Western movies? Given example to make your point.

I agree completely – modern superhero and fantasy movies also serve the function of integrating these values further into Western society and the world. While I haven’t watched any of the films listed in the presentation, I have seen news stories about how recent movies such as Black Panther have made extra efforts to ensure that women and minority groups have been given starring roles. Black Panther was even slated to feature a gay couple but the scenes were removed before it was released.

3. What do Globo and Bollywood have in common?

Globo and Bollywood are the two major examples of privately funded global programming. They don’t dominate as a transnational cultural product to the degree that U.S., European, and Japanese programming do; however, they are still large cultural forces that influence surrounding regions.

4. What reasons does Tyler Cowen cite for the American film industry has been much more successful than the European?

The U.S. film industry has the largest home-market in terms of gross revenue and benefits from a more homogenized culture than Europe, where languages and demographics usually vary between each country. Hollywood is a result of geographic clustering of talent which strengthens its market position. Hollywood has excellent access to capital and spends vast amounts of money to produce films designed to appeal universally and produce revenue, whereas European state-owned media companies produce low- to mid-budget films primarily to promote a cultural agenda. Additionally, Hollywood benefits from the dominance of the English language in the U.S. and throughout many parts of the world.
