Eye Retina And Visual System Of The Mouse:

Eye, Retina, and Visual System of the Mouse Leo M. Chalupa, Robert W. Williams, 2008 Recent years have seen a burst of studies on the mouse eye and visual system fueled in large part by the relatively recent ability to produce mice with precisely defined changes in gene sequence Mouse models have contributed to a wide range of scientific breakthroughs for a number of ocular and neurological diseases and have allowed researchers to address fundamental issues that were difficult to approach with other experimental models This comprehensive guide to current research captures the first wave of studies in the field with fifty nine chapters by leading scholars that demonstrate the usefulness of mouse models as a bridge between experimental and clinical research The opening chapters introduce the mouse as a species and research model discussing such topics as the mouse s evolutionary history and the mammalian visual system Subsequent sections explore more specialized subjects considering optics psychophysics and the visual behaviors of mice the organization of the adult mouse eye and central visual system the development of the mouse eye including comparisons to human development the development and plasticity of retinal projections and visuotopic maps mouse models for human eye disease including glaucoma and cataracts and the application of advanced genomic technologies including gene therapy and genetic knockouts to the mouse visual system Readers of this unique reference will see that the study of mouse models has already demonstrated real translational prowess in vision research

The Mouse Nervous System Charles Watson, George Paxinos, Luis Puelles, 2011-09-22 The Mouse Nervous System provides a comprehensive account of the central nervous system of the mouse The book is aimed at molecular biologists who need a book that introduces them to the anatomy of the mouse brain and spinal cord but also takes them into the relevant details of development and organization of the area they have chosen to study The Mouse Nervous System offers a wealth of new information for experienced anatomists who work on mice The book serves as a valuable resource for researchers and graduate students in neuroscience Systematic consideration of the anatomy and connections of all regions of the brain and spinal cord by the authors of the most cited rodent brain atlases A major section 12 chapters on functional systems related to motor control sensation and behavioral and emotional states A detailed analysis of gene expression during development of the forebrain by Luis Puelles the leading researcher in this area Full coverage of the role of gene expression during development and the new field of genetic neuroanatomy using site specific recombinases Examples of the use of mouse models in the study of neurological illness

Plasticity in the Visual System Raphael Pinaud, Liisa A. Tremere, Peter de Weerd, 2006-04-04 Mechanisms of neural plasticity enable the encoding and memorization of information based on sensory inputs and can be harnessed to partially restore function after CNS assault such as stroke or head trauma In the present book experts from the field of visual system plasticity describe and evaluate the evidence for neural mechanisms proposed to underlie CNS plasticity in the major divisions of the brain dedicated to visual processing the retina sub cortical structures and cortex We present studies from a wide variety of disciplines that range from molecular biology to neurophysiology and computer modeling. Leading investigators discuss their own work and integrate this research with colleagues from other specializations. The book points out future applications for this research including clinical uses and engineering within the biomedical sciences. This book is an exciting and thought provoking read for all levels of science enthusiast interested in the physical basis of learning and cognition.

Development of the Visual System S.P. Bhat, 2004-01-01. All the tissues of the eye including the lens, the cornea, the ciliary body, the neuroretina and the retinal pigment epithelium must work in harmony for the realization of clear vision. The phenotypic emergence of each of these tissues requires intercellular communication which is achieved through direct physical contact as well as through diffusion and reception of the molecular beacons. This volume provides an overview of the molecular and cellular biology of eye development and encompasses themes like early gene expression in the surface ectoderm and the optic cup, retinal neurogenesis, signaling molecules and axonal guidance. It presents new findings on the influence of the lens on the development of the visual system and how gene expression in the optic cup controls differentiation of the lens fiber cell while established ideas about the morphogenesis of the ciliary body are challenged. A valuable source of information for developmental biologists and neurobiologists as well as ophthalmologists interested in understanding the relationship between temporally and spatially regulated gene activity and function and cellular interactions in early development and neuronal functions.

The editor is Director of the German Mouse Clinic and member of the Project Committee of the German National Genome Research Network and provides here a brief introduction to the mouse as a model for diseases and functional analysis of genes and proteins. Throughout he focuses on the characterization of mouse models using the latest phenotyping methods with the different areas presented in a clearly structured and easily accessible manner.

Introduction One of the basic principles underlying the efficiency and adaptability of cellular metabolism is the structural compartmentalization of the cell Only through compartmentalization can reaction components be kept apart prior to their reaction isolated from other reaction spaces during the course of their reaction and the reaction products incorporated into designated structures or transported to remote parts of the cell Thus the partitioning of the cellular substance into countless membranous spaces corresponds to the spatial segregation of reaction components and the dynamics of intracellular membrane systems is an expression of ever changing equilibrium conditions and the continuous formation of new reaction spaces It has been shown with some certainty that many of the processes in membrane dynamics can take place only with the aid of contractile proteins such as actin myosin and tubulin Excerpta Medica ,1990 Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences of the United States of America National Academy of Sciences (U.S.),1926 The Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences PNAS publishes research reports commentaries reviews colloquium papers and actions of the Academy PNAS is a multidisciplinary journal that covers the biological physical and social sciences Handbook of Sensory Physiology ,1971 Studies in Developmental Neurobiology W.
