Summer at Steller's Creek Anne Clay Cernyar, 2000-09 Penny I said uneasily It's getting dark She looked around at the darkening water and deepening shadows Then we stared at each other with wide eyes Let's go she quavered We reeled in the fishing line grabbed our bait can and started back through the trees In a few moments we reached the trail and paused to catch our breath Then we heard it Deep in the willow thicket as if something heavy had stepped on it a branch cracked We stood paralyzed for a second Don't move I whispered just as Penny screamed and started running up the trail toward the cabin A spunky twelve year old homeschooler A remote cabin in the Rocky Mountains An older brother's secret A lively wolf dog pup and dogsled dreams A dangerous visitor and a hostile neighbor with unsettling questions Is Jessica ready for her summer at Steller's Creek Extra An Afterword with discussion questions presents classical arguments for God's existence From the Foreword A delightful read It keeps you reading and enjoying the story while you learn how to walk with God I highly recommend it Dr Gary Habermas Distinguished Professor and Chair of the Department of Philosophy and Theology at Liberty University
