Global warming poses the greatest threat to coastlines and communities at a global scale. The IPCC predicts a 50cm-1m rise in sea levels by 2100 which would cause 70 percent of the Maldives to be submerged and pose a similar threat to other low lying coastline communities such as Bangladesh. This is because global warming causes melting of glaciers.

A place that will be affected by global warming is Holderness as because of the weak geology that resides in that coastline. As global warming isn't just the warming of the earth but the consistency of extreme weather and because the Holderness coast is mostly built up of soft rock the increase of extreme weather will cause the already extreme erosion rates of 2m a yr. to most like to 3 or 4 m of erosion at the coast. And this is bad as the local people will have to retreat from their homes they live in as the council in that area is using the strategy hold the line were they do not do anything allow the area to erode as its seen as low value .
